Management Commentary

The trust underperformed its benchmark in March. The largest positive contributors were stock selection in industrial engineering and banks. Conversely, stock selection in general retailers and financial services detracted from relative returns. Our overweight in Fenner, the polymer technology world leader specialising in industrial conveyor belt systems, was positive for the portfolio: the cyclical recovery in its key end-markets has driven earnings upgrades and strong share price performance. Moreover, the recommended cash bid approach from Michelin towards the end of March drove the share price higher. Our overweight position in the security software and hardware company Sophos Group detracted from relative returns. The cyber security firm was negatively impacted after reporting a slowdown in orders, raising fears that it would miss its full-year forecasts.

- External factors may cause an entire asset class to decline in value. Prices and values of all shares or all bonds could decline at the same time, or fluctuate in response to the performance of individual companies and general market conditions.
- This trust may utilise gearing (borrowing) which will exaggerate market movements both up and down.
- This trust invests in smaller companies which may increase its risk profile.
- The share price may trade at a discount to the Net Asset Value of the company.
- The single market in which the Trust primarily invests, in this case the UK, may be subject to particular political and economic risks and, as a result, the trust may be more volatile than more broadly diversified trusts.
